O soave fanciulla (Oh lovely girl) a romantic duet from Giacomo Puccini's first act 1896 opera La bohème It is sung as the closing number in act 1 by Rodolfo (tenor) and Mimi (soprano). Duet music, between 5 and 6 minutes long, is written in the signature of the shared time, the A major key, but ends in C major. The last bar in the orchestra is marked by harp harmonics descending through the final C main chords. [1] When Mimi and Rodolfo realize they are in love (unison A! tu sol comandi, amor! /Fremon già nell'anima), the music returns to the opera's love leitmotif from Rodolfo's aria Che gelida manina (talor dal mioziere). They leave the stage together and sing Moore! Mimi C's latest note is high, marked perendosi (fading away), and while the following E is written for Rodolfo, many tenors also call C high, making the latest note unison. Following Rudolpho Che gelida manina and Mimi's Sì, mi chiamano Mimi, duet ends one of the most romantic passages in all operas. [2] Libretto The libretto is by Luigi Illica and Giuseppe Giacosa. Rodolfo and Mimi met for the first time a few minutes ago. She told him about his life (Che gelida manina), and asked him to tell him about him (Sì, mi chiamano Mimi). In this duet, O soave fanciulla realizes that they have fallen in love. Rodolfo's friends call him to join them, but he prefers to stay with Mimi, but he shyly suggests they all go out together. Rudolfo comments on how cold the outside is, but Mimi promises to stay near him. He remains open to the possibility of a subsequent return to Garrett. They leave the scene [3] [4] Literal translation Singable translation Mimi si è avvicinata ancor più alla finestra per modo che i raggi lunari la illuminano: Rodolfo, volgendosi, scorge Mimi avvolta come come unkambo ni di luce, e la contempla, quasi estatico.
